Late Breaker: We are in uncharted waters for the 2020 respiratory season. We are facing the prospect of the coronavirus disease 2019 (COVID-19) pandemic and a simultaneous epidemic of seasonal influenza. We need to do everything we can to try to minimize the burden of disease from respiratory infections. Mask wearing, physical distancing, improved hand hygiene practices will also help with decreasing transmission of influenza, which is being observed in many countries in the Southern Hemisphere at the moment. Influenza vaccination is more important now than ever and we should encourage patients and families to get vaccinated at every health-seeking opportunity.
